Fourth Consecutive Weekly Increase After A 17-Week Decline

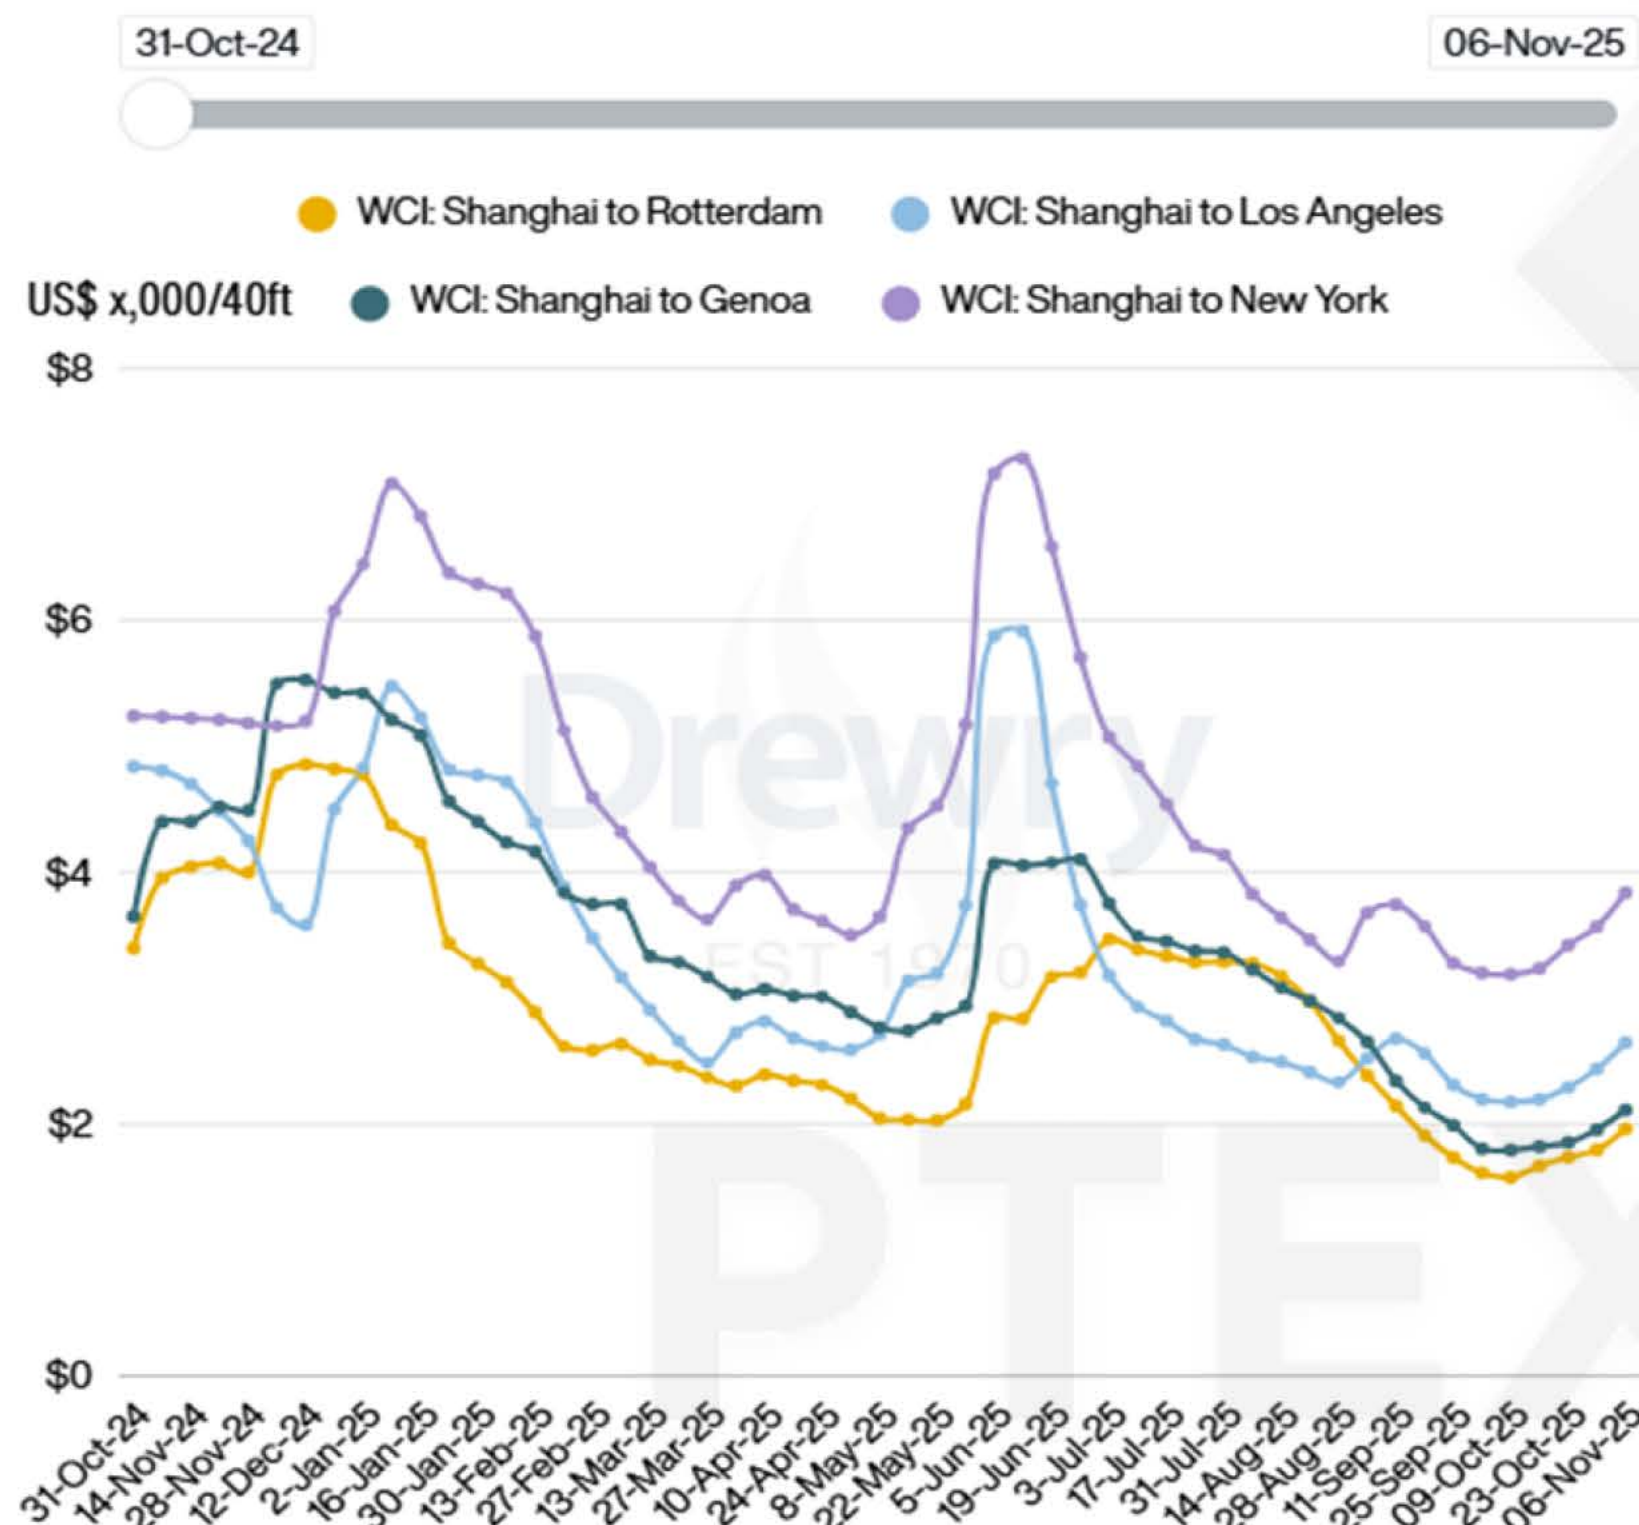

The Drewry World Container Index (WCI) rose 8% to $1,959 per 40ft container

The Drewry World Container Index (WCI) rose 8% to $1,959 per 40ft container, marking the fourth consecutive weekly increase after a 17-week decline.

- Shanghai – Los Angeles: up 9% to $2,647 per 40ft container.
- Shanghai – New York: up 8% to $3,837 per 40ft container.
 - The rise was driven by General Rate Increases (GRIs) implemented on November 1 to offset downward pressure from excess capacity. However, this upward trend is expected to be temporary unless additional GRIs are introduced.
- Shanghai – Rotterdam: up 9% to $1,962 per 40ft container.
- Shanghai – Genoa: up 8% to $2,111 per 40ft container.
 - Carriers on the Asia–Europe route are raising FAK rates to $3,000–$3,600 per 40ft container (effective November 15) in an attempt to lift spot rates ahead of the new annual contract season.

Drewry's forecast indicates that the supply-demand balance will weaken in the coming quarters, likely causing spot rates to decline again.

WCI Trade Routes from Shanghai (US$/40ft)

Currency

USD/VND exchange rate showed a slight upward trend this week, reflecting continued market adjustment after the U.S. Federal Reserve's rate cut.

Market Liquidity & Stock Levels

The Vietnamese black pepper market is experiencing significant structural changes driven by regulatory pressures, inventory constraints, and evolving international trade dynamics. Critical developments affecting supply chains, pricing, and market opportunities for Q4 2025 and beyond.

Reduced Market Liquidity

Small traders and cooperatives have exited the market due to VAT prepayment requirements and slim profit margins, significantly reducing market liquidity.

Depleted Domestic Stocks

Domestic inventories are nearly exhausted as we approach the year-end demand surge period.

Rising International Demand

Year-end demand typically increases 10-15%, putting additional pressure on limited supply.

Import Volume Increase

Expected surge in imports to offset domestic shortages ahead of the new harvest season.
